

Invitation to open conference on Professional Development and Networked Learning

6th April 2017 at Aalborg University,
Rendsburggade 14, Aalborg

We are excited to invite you to an open one-day conference on professional development and networked learning. The aim of this open conference is to bring together researchers, practitioners as well as people from the industry to discuss challenges relating to professional development and networked learning. The day will feature keynotes and discussions on topics such as: How are Massive Open Online Courses (MOOCs) relevant in continuing education for professionals? How can we create online knowledge sharing networks amongst professionals, and how can we measure the impact of such networks?

For the day, we have invited three international keynote speakers who will give 30 minutes' inspirational talks that each is followed by interactive and participant-driven sessions. Keynote speakers are:

- Vivien Hodgson, Lancaster University - Networked learning in management and professional development
- Maarten de Laat, University of Wollongong/Open University of the Netherlands - Practice-based research and Value Creation in Professional development Networks
- Allison Littlejohn, Open University UK - Informal professional learning: how professionals learn in networked environments including MOOCs

Each presentation is followed by a session, where we in smaller groups will discuss challenges presented by the keynotes speaker as well as challenges, you and other participants are facing in your work with networked learning for professional development.

During registration (deadline 1. March), we will invite you to briefly describe a challenge or a question, you face in your work and practice. These challenges and questions will help us organise and shape the interactions in the thematic session

For more information and registration, see: www.nl.aau.dk

The conference is free of charge (lunch & coffee included), but there will be a no-show fee (visible from registration site).
